Vertigo: This symptom is the result of excessive fluid accumulation in the inner ear which is a very unpredictable and terrifying symptom of the disease.

Partial Hearing Loss: This symptom can be experienced in either one or both ears or that too with low-toned sounds.

Tinnitus: It is a symptom caused by the A ringing sensation on one or both ears.

Why do people get Ménière's disease? There are lots of theories which exist as to what causes Ménière's disease. However, there are no definite answers available.

There are people who are of the opinion that Ménière's disease can be caused by constrictions in the blood vessels very much like that cause migraine headaches. Since the disease which appears to run in the families. This disease can also be caused by genetic variations which are enough to cause abnormalities in the regulation of endolymph fluid or the volume of hearing.

What is the diagnosis for the Ménière's disease? It is the otolaryngologist who will diagnose the Ménière's disease. He is also commonly known as the nose, ear, and throat doctor, or the ENT doctor. However, there is no single test or symptom which the otolaryngologist can utilize in order to make a proper diagnosis. The diagnosis will be based on your medical history and the presence of:

Tinnitus

Two or more symptoms of vertigo lasting for at least twenty minutes each

Temporary hearing loss

There is a feeling of fullness in the ear
